

YOUNG HALL

Hey guys, it's John Hovell again, here to talk to you about Young Hall.

- ● Although it is called Young Hall, it is the second oldest building on campus. It was first established as a library during FDR's New Deal and was later renovated to house our largest lecture halls on campus.
- ● In this building, you'll usually have history courses and intro courses to psychology and sociology. Classroom size will depend on the time of day you choose and whether or not it pertains to your major. Since courses of history are required for graduation, you're bound to be in Young Hall at least once.
- ● For most lectured academic courses, you're looking at about a class of 60. However, our Faculty-Student ratio is about 1 and 19, which is low, and I like it that way, because it gives me that one-on-one attention and you get to know your professors. You're not just a number on a sheet, but a student they want to see succeed.

I've personally taken four courses in Young Hall and have many more to come for my major in education. That's Young Hall. Thanks for listening and Go Nighthawks!
